After the Ayodhya incidents on 06th December, 1992, when the RSS, Bajrang Dal and VHP were banned by the Government of India in 1993, Advocate Alok Kumarji strongly argued the case of RSS before the Tribunal. It is noteworthy that the Tribunal had said that "By itself the Ramjanmabhoomi movement could be termed as laudable as far as Hindus are concerned. There is no legal ban on such organizations and associations in launching movements in respect of other holy places". During that case it also became apparent to all that more than 97.7 million people had affirmed their signatures for construction of Rama Temple at His birth place in Ayodhya irrespective of province, language and religion and it amply proved the national character of the movement.

Late Acharya Giriraj Kishore Ji had urged upon Shri Alok Kumarji to fight the legal battle for Didima Sadhvi Ritambharaji's Service Trust in the court of law, and he brought victory for the cause.
